

PAROLE REVIEWS: FISCAL YEAR 2020 (7/1/2019-6/30/2020)

A parole review is when the Board of Parole meets with an inmate to review the specifics of their case, their institutional behavior/misconducts, and the progress they have made with respect to their programming. The Board of Parole conducts reviews for all inmates who are 3 or fewer years from their parole eligibility date (PED) and informal interviews for inmates who have a parole hearing set more than 1 year in the future. Between July 2019 and June 2020, the Board of Parole attended 2,696 reviews and 822 informal interviews. For reviews of inmates who have 2 years or less until their PED, the Board can decide to (a) set a parole hearing date for the inmate (a decision of set case) or (b) defer the inmate to be seen at a later date or to the end of their sentence (a decision of deferred). The graphs below provides a breakdown of the reviews for inmates (based on their PED) including the informal interviews held and all decisions provided at reviews for those inmates with 2 years or less between their parole eligibility date and the date of their review:

Informal Interviews and Reviews, Fiscal Year 2020

Decisions for Offender Reviews with PED Less than 2 Years Out, Fiscal Year 2020

What are the Factors that lead to Deferral or Denial at a Review?

When the Board defers or denies the setting of a parole hearing for an inmate, a factor or set of factors are listed for each key review. For any review, a single or several factors may be chosen. The factors identified for reviews held for inmates with 2 or fewer years until their parole eligibility date between July 2019 and June 2020 are listed below. The categories are color-coded: blue are inmate-specific or offense-specific reasons, gray are information-specific reasons, yellow are programming-specific reasons, and black are other reasons.

Review Deferral and Denial Factors, Fiscal Year 2020

