

PAROLE REVIEWS: FISCAL YEAR 2019 (7/1/18-6/30/19)

A parole review is when the Board of Parole meets with an inmate to review the specifics of their case, their institutional behavior/misconducts, and the progress they have made with respect to their programming. The Board of Parole conducts case reviews for inmates who are more than 2 years from their parole eligibility date and key reviews for inmates within 2 years of their parole eligibility date. Inmates with case reviews are deferred at those reviews to be seen at a later date; between July 2018 and June 2019, the Board of Parole attended 619 case reviews. At a key review, the Board can decide to (a) set a parole hearing date for the inmate (a decision of set case) or (b) defer the inmate to be seen at a later date or to the end of their sentence (a decision of deferred). The graph below provides a breakdown of all key review decisions and the reasons for those decisions.

What are the Reasons for Deferral or Denial at an Inmate's Key Review?

When the Board defers or denies the setting of a parole hearing for an inmate, a reason or set of reasons are listed for each key review. For any one key review, a single or several reasons may be chosen. The reasons submitted for key reviews held between July 2018 and June 2019 are listed below. The categories are color-coded: blue are inmate-specific or offense-specific reasons, gray are institution-specific reasons, yellow are programming-specific reasons, and black are other reasons.
